

A Look Round Literature (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from A Look Round Literature Most of the articles in this volume are reprinted from the critical and other periodical papers of the day. They have no arbitrary connection with each other, but they sufficiently indicate the point of view of a writer whose opinions are somewhat independent of current criticism. Some of these opinions will doubtless awaken animadversion in quarters self-considered authoritative; but the literary Inquisition, like its religious prototype, will soon be a thing of the past, and, in the meanwhile, I am fortunately not alone in refusing to accept all literary religions merely because they are based on good historical evidence, and possess quasi-miraculous pretensions. At the same time, I have quite as great a distrust of my own discernment, as of that of any of my contemporaries. I simply put down my impressions for what they are worth, and leave the rest to the common-sense of the reading public in general.
