

Excerpt from The Cabinet, Vol. 2 of 2: A Series of Essays, Moral and Literary I Have now devoted my labours, for a considerable time, to the amendment of my fellow citizens in the ancient metropolis of Scotland. And although my residence has not been so constant as to forbid occasional trips to my paternal seat, and old hereditary trees, yet these visits have not been so long or settled as to interfere with my urban speculations. I have now, however, thought it proper to make a migration of a more deliberate and continued character. I have moved myself and family, for some time, to the country; and the present paper, and several of its followers, will salute my readers fresh from the groves and streams.
