

Sydnee Prescott's life is perfect. Well, her business life is perfect. The fraud investigation firm she is a partner in has become The Firm to hire and they have more work than they can handle. On a personal level, not so much. She still hasn't gotten over her divorce seven years ago. They were young, naive, and - probably - more in lust than in love, but she still agonizes over the fact that it ended so badly. Cade let her down when she most needed him; still no other man has ever won her heart. Cade Tanner's life has been nothing but frustration for almost as long as he can remember. His father pressured him to take on a position in the family's company that he didn't really want, and then meddled in his personal life as well. Some of that meddling helped destroy his marriage. And no matter how hard Cade has tried, he can't seem to fall in love again. He can't forget the woman who challenged him, drove him crazy in bed, and tolerated his need to be a dominant in their relationship. Neither thought they would see each other again. Neither expected to be forced to do so. But just when Cade can really consider walking away from his role in the family firm, he learns the IRS is about to start a serious investigation into possible fraud and embezzlement within the company. The board demands that Triple D - the best in the business - be hired to do the internal investigation. It's his ex-wife's firm and she's the person who would handle the investigation. How can they possibly work together? How can they resist their still powerful sexual needs for one another? How can she hide any longer from the fact that she not only tolerated his dominance in - and out of - bed, she craved it? Even more, how can he protect her from both his father's hatred of her and from someone out to harm her during the investigation?
