

When Vows Were Sacred

To love, honor and obey, till death do us part. Those are sacred vows. Carol Anne has lived up to hers. But for Tony Di Marco, marriage is just an inconvenience. He thinks of the death part. Having her killed is first and foremost in his mind. Carol Anne has to go. Their money is in a joint account and that has to change. Her life insurance money will be his. He has covered his tracks very well. The gun and the money, both given to the killer, are untraceable. Unfortunately, his trail is picked up by his now-deceased wife's brothers. They apply pressure where the cops legally can't. Ironically, he seeks protection from the people who are tasked with solving crime—the police. Detective Joe Cairns simply sets it up, waits and lets it happen.
